Jody Williams, Nobel Peace Laureate, will be joining the faculty of the GSSW as a Distinguished Visiting Scholar in Fall 2003. Williams will teach “Global Justice: Patterns, Perspectives and Strategies” during the fall semester. The course will focus on the study of power and oppression. According to the Nobel Laureate, “It’s never too late to make a difference.”

As the driving force behind the International Campaign to Ban Landmines, Williams became an activist in her early 30s. Since then, she has strived to make the world a much safer place. Through her recent lecture at the UH Graduate School of Social Work’s Second Annual Jenkins Distinguished Lecture, Williams speech, “Individual Impact on Social and Political Change,” addressed the importance of active citizenry.

“I’m not just talking about getting out there and voting,” Williams said. “I’m talking about the ability of an individual to bring about change, for citizens to be actively involved in shaping the world.”

Williams concern for the damage caused by landmines either left behind after wars or used as a tactic to intimidate civilians began in the late 1980s. In 1991, she began her efforts to coordinate an international effort to ban the production of landmines globally.

By 1997, the Mine Ban Treaty was circulated globally and signed by 146 countries; 130 have ratified the treaty which calls for stopping the production of landmines, removing them from the ground and assisting landmine casualties with

Social Workers Receive Awards

The Third Annual Social Work Awards Breakfast was held in conjunction with the Inaugural Gerson David Lecture on March 14. The breakfast is co-sponsored annually by the ABSW (Houston Unit), Lamar University (BSW Program), NASW (Houston and Gulf Coast Units), Prairie View A&M University (BSW Program), University of Houston-Clear Lake (BSW Program), University of Houston GSSW and the GSSW Alumni Association. Awards were given this year to 12 outstanding social workers and community leaders.

The Association of Black Social Workers honored Merrie Barr Evans and Marilyn Barr Pickens as Social Workers of the Year. The Graduate School of Social Work Alumni Association honored Paola Roldan with the Charlotte Campbell Scholarship; Maconda B. O’Connor, the Dean’s Award for Excellence; Margie Jenkins, the Distinguished Alumni Award; and Barbara Mackey, the Distinguished Service Award. The National Association of Social Workers Gulf Coast Unit awarded Nancy Phillips the Lifetime Achievement in Social Work Award; Ted Hanley was selected Public Citizen of the Year; and Linda Coleman was honored as Social Worker of the Year. A MESSAGE FROM DEAN COLBY

What a marvelous and fast-paced year for the GSSW. We began the year with our largest enrollment in years following a significant increase in applications to the GSSW. The percentage of out-of-state students reached 11 percent, a significant increase over the average 2 percent since 1990. And for the first time since the early 1990s, the majority of students are full-time.

And next year, a Nobel Laureate, the 1997 Peace Prize recipient, will join the GSSW faculty and co-teach a course on global justice. Quick question: Can you name the last Nobel Peace Prize winner to hold a faculty appointment in a school of social work—Jane Addams!

So, we ask why?? Why is the GSSW experience unique in particular when compared to most schools around the country?

Let me identify some of the key pieces that have come together over the years that provide the GSSW a solid foundation on which to build. First, the GSSW faculty is stellar. And, as noted elsewhere in Connections, a number of new incredibly gifted individuals have recently joined the faculty. During the school’s spring 2003 site visit for CSWE accreditation, the “team members” specifically noted the faculty members’ individual collective passion, expertise, and commitment as a significant strength of the school.

Certainly the school’s curriculum is a major drawing point for individuals and helps carve out the GSSW’s growing national reputation. The gerontology concentration is recognized as one of the top five among all schools while the political social work concentration is recognized as the national model. Children and families, health care and mental health are also considered among the leading specializations in the nation.

Unquestionably, the school’s ability to support students with scholarships and other forms of financial assistance is important. This year, more than 200 students received financial assistance from school-based scholarships or national scholarships; the child welfare stipend program and the gerontology fellowship program added another 80 fellowships to our students.

Many in the region and nation recognize GSSW alumni for their ongoing levels of excellence and abilities to create positive change. From legislative offices in Washington, D.C. to entry-level child protective service worker positions on the Texas border, GSSW alumni build on the profession’s rich history to strengthen communities for all people by insuring that all people, no matter their station in life, are provided the guarantees of a just society. These good works, by so many GSSW alumni, help attract top medical and psychological treatment.

In 1997, Williams was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for her diligent efforts to ban and dispose of landmines. The prize was no doubt encouraging for Williams and the ICBL, and it helped further communicate the landmine cause to others around the world.

Association of Social Workers Houston Unit honored Debra Danburg as Public Citizen of the Year, Margaret O’Donnell as Social Worker of the Year, and Tara Etter as Social Work Student of the Year.

On March 13, 150 students, faculty and community members gathered outside the GSSW to attend the Stroll-In-Rally to Defeat House Bills 194 and 916. HB 194 would prohibit gays, lesbians, and bisexuals from serving as foster parents in Texas and would call for the forced removal of children already settled in loving, stable homes if it is determined that foster parents are gay, lesbian, or bisexual. HB 916 would amend state law to require that a petition for adoption filed by more than one person, be filed by one man and one woman.

The Stroll-In featured a legislative letter writing outpost and a slate of prominent speakers from the community including: Houston City Council Member Annise Parker, Attorney Mitchell Katine, Attorney Connie Moore, Stephen “Arch” Erich and Eva Thibaudeau-Graczyk. The event was emceed by Dean Ira Colby.

On March 17, The Stroll-In Rally letters were piled into baby strollers and were delivered to each committee member at the Capitol during the Lesbian Gay Rights Lobby Day.

The Stroll-In Rally was co-sponsored by Children Before Politics, a group from Dr. Steven Applewhite’s Community Practice class and SEA Change. The effort resulted in a powerful display of social action.

On March 14, Arun Gandhi, the grandson of celebrated peace activist Mahatma Gandhi, delivered the UH Graduate School of Social Work Inaugural Gerson David Lecture during the Third Annual Greater Houston Area Social Work Awards Breakfast. According to Gandhi, the most important teaching of his grandfather was the comprehensive philosophy of nonviolence. He stated, "The key to understanding nonviolence is to realize that we have to live it to be able to practice it effectively."

Gandhi’s lecture was appropriately titled “Justice Through the Eyes of My Grandfather." Gandhi began his address by recalling what his grandfather thought social work to be: “My grandfather considered social work to be the greatest religion. Grandfather believed that when a person serves humanity, he or she is serving God. He held social work in the highest esteem and we need to continue to honor all people that dedicate their lives to serving humankind."

Mahatma Gandhi gave his grandson a list of what he called the “seven sins of the world” and told him to dedicate his life to changing them in order to create peace and harmony. The list included: “wealth without work, pleasure without conscience, knowledge without character, commerce without morality, science without humanity, worship without sacrifice, and politics without principle.” Gandhi shared that he recently added the eighth sin to the list, “rights without responsibilities.” Gandhi emphasized that "Unless we become the change we wish to see in the world, we can never really create that kind of peace and harmony. He went on to add that "We have to respect ourselves, respect each other and respect our connections with all of creation."

The annual Gerson David Lecture is devoted to issues relating to the ideals of peace and social justice. Arun Gandhi left a lasting impression with his audience and a charge to take his message of peace and carry it throughout the world.

Gandhi, who as a teenager lived with his grandfather in India, is currently a Scholar-in-Residence at Christian Brothers University in Memphis, Tennessee. He is the founder of the Mahatma K. Gandhi Institute for Nonviolence, a former Times of India reporter, and the author of eight books.

The GSSW Office of Community Projects (OCP) serves as a vital link between the social service community and the Graduate School of Social Work. Under the directorship of Ann McFarland and her outstanding staff of program managers, linkages extend into the undergraduate curriculum through the American Humanics Nonprofit Certificate Program, and the Child Welfare Education Project that prepares master’s level social work students for the challenging and rewarding work in children’s protective services. OCP provides opportunities for GSSW faculty and the community to collaborate on needs assessments and program evaluations for social service agencies throughout the state of Texas. The Continuing Education program is designed to provide the human services community with opportunities to build practice knowledge and skills by offering courses that are responsive, dynamic and up-to-date in their content. The Funding Source assists organizations with locating funding opportunities and to aid in the development of grant-writing skills. The Protective Services Training Institute of Texas provides interactive, skill-based training to protective services caseworkers and supervisors throughout the state on a comprehensive array of topics. OCP is broad in scope yet effective in delivery. For further information, call (713)743-8145 or email amcfarland@uh.edu.
Faculty Highlights

Andy Achenbaum joined the GSSW faculty in Fall 2002 as Professor of History and Social Work. He is the former dean of the UH College of Liberal Arts and Social Sciences. He is the past chair of the board of the National Council on the Aging and is currently serving as secretary of the Gerontological Society of America.

Brené Brown joined the GSSW faculty as an assistant professor in Fall 2002. She holds a BSW from UT-Austin and MSW and Ph.D. degrees from the GSSW. Dr. Brown has taught at the undergraduate and graduate levels for the past five years. Her teaching areas include political social work, research and women’s issues. This summer, she will teach the GSSW’s first fully on-line course (Women’s Issues) and during the Fall 2003 semester she will co-teach a course on global social justice issues with Jody Williams, Distinguished Visiting Scholar to UH. She is the author of the forthcoming book, “Fractured: What Shame Does to Women and the Path from Pain to Power.”

Li-Mei Chen joined the faculty as an assistant professor in Fall 2002. She has just been selected by the John A. Hartford Foundation as a Fellow through the Geriatric Social Work Initiative Faculty Scholars Program. Dr. Chen has delivered numerous presentations throughout the year at conferences including the 49th Annual Program Meeting of CSWE, the Society for Social Work Research, and the 55th Annual Scientific Meeting of the Gerontological Society of America. She recently had an article accepted in the Journal of International Psychogeriatrics.

Howard Karger was just awarded a contract with Columbia University Press for his book, Scamming the Poor: On Being Trapped in America’s Fringe Economy. The book examines pawnshops, payday loan and check cashing outlets, tax refund loans, secured credit card vendors, home buying, remodeling, and refinancing schemes; the rent-to-own industry, used car lots, sub-prime and nonprime lenders, fringe auto insurers, and fringe market telecommunications companies. The book does not simply list economic scams; it provides a lens for understanding the economic lives of the poor.

Barbara Henley, LMSW-ACP, received the Susan L. Browder Award from the Texas Chapter of the Society for Social Leadership in Health Care. This award is given to an individual who has been an outstanding mentor to health care social workers and who has been a lifetime leader for the social work profession in Texas. She spoke at the Harris County Hospital District Social Work Department Luncheon in March on “The Power of Social Work: Preserving Rights and Strengthening Voices.”

Howard Brown joined the GSSW faculty as an assistant professor in Fall 2002. He holds a BSW from UT-Austin and MSW and Ph.D. degrees from the GSSW. Dr. Brown has taught at the undergraduate and graduate levels for the past five years. Her teaching areas include political social work, research and women’s issues. This summer, she will teach the GSSW’s first fully on-line course (Women’s Issues) and during the Fall 2003 semester she will co-teach a course on global social justice issues with Jody Williams, Distinguished Visiting Scholar to UH. She is the author of the forthcoming book, “Fractured: What Shame Does to Women and the Path from Pain to Power.”

Monit Cheung was honored by the YWCA of Houston as the 2002 Woman of Achievement in the Education category. Dr. Cheung reported on the National Matrix on Title IV-E Stipends/ Paybacks at the Child Welfare Symposium at CSWE’s annual meeting in February. This national survey has been highly praised by the national IV-E partners.

Maxine Weinman Epstein has been promoted to full professor. Congratulations to Dr. Epstein on this significant professional accomplishment!

Gerson David has been awarded the 2003 Edith Abbott Distinguished Alumni Award from the University of Chicago School of Social Administration.

Alumni Storm the State Capitol

GSSW alumni teamed up as Cougar Advocates for Texas and headed for Austin on February 18 to promote “Excellence Funding for Texas: One Goal, One Fund.” The CATS program, launched in 1998, is an effort of the Houston Alumni Organization and the UH Office of Government Relations to encourage, support and coordinate alumni activities on behalf of higher education in the state of Texas. Cougar Advocates for Texas seeks, through activities and projects, to bring the full force of alumni opinion to bear upon the process of state government toward higher education.

CATS advocated to their representatives and/or senators on behalf of the University of Houston and higher education in Texas. Information about important issues affecting UH was given out to more than 300 advocates before the legislative session, and those advocates called, wrote, visited, or emailed their legislators about those issues. Barbara McGinity, Michael Rogers, Stephanie Foy, Will Dickey and Amy Blakeney attended the February 18 event on behalf of the GSSW Alumni Association.
