The department understands that instructors will be expected to provide student work and to participate in university-wide assessments of student work. This could include, but may not be limited to, designing instruments such as rubrics, and scoring work by students in this or other courses. In addition, instructors of core courses may be asked to include brief assessment activities in their course.

DESCRIPTION OF COURSE:

The course will focus on the study of literary works of nonfiction prose, centering on important aspects of the Western tradition. While our main concern will be students' individual writing, we will also investigate some theoretical and ethical issues. For example, what does it mean to write today as a "public intellectual"? What are our responsibilities as writers in a postmodern world in which globalization, economics, and politics are so inextricably intertwined? The course will involve critical reading as well as writing, and we will look at a wide range of models. The course will focus on public and socially conscious writing. Students will find original topics and will work toward publication of their work.

Some of the genres the course will explore include place or travel writing, profile writing, explanatory writing, cultural writing, environmental, nature, and science writing, and opinion-based writing. Readings will consist primarily of essay collections:

- The Best American Essays 2011
- The Best American Travel Writing 2011
- The Best American Science and Nature Writing 2011
- Jonathan Dixon, Beaten, Seared, and Sauced: On Becoming a Chef at the Culinary Institute of America
- Henry David Thoreau, Walden

Core Objectives

- Critical Thinking Skills—to include creative thinking, innovation, inquiry, and analysis, evaluation and synthesis of information
- Communication Skills—to include effective development, interpretation and expression of ideas through written, oral and visual communication
- Personal Responsibility—to include the ability to connect choices, actions and consequences to ethical decision-making
- Social Responsibility to include intercultural competence, knowledge of civic responsibility, and the ability to engage effectively in regional, national, and global communities

Student Learning Outcomes (based on individual class)

- •Students will understand and demonstrate appropriate strategies for reading and writing literary nonfiction essays.
- •Students will learn to make appropriate written, oral, and visual communication choices in writing various genres of literary nonfiction.
- •Students will use critical thinking, writing, and thinking skills and apply them to specific rhetorical situations, depending on the needs of the audience, purpose, occasion, and context, and will explore different styles appropriate to literary nonfiction.
- •Students will explore issues of personal and social responsibility in class and in their writing.

COURSE EXPECTATIONS:

Attendance is a crucial part of your success in this course. Please make attending class every day, on time, a priority. I understand that situations come up that make it impossible to attend class; therefore, in accordance with English Department policy, four absences are permitted without any loss of points. Each subsequent absence could result in a subtraction of 25 points. In addition, you have two "free" tardies. After that, each two tardies will count as one absence. If you arrive more than 20 minutes late or leave more than 20 minute early, you are absent.

Reading and Writing: The course has reasonable reading and writing requirements that may seem heavy at times. Keep up with the assignments in to get the most out of the class. It is imperative to do the reading and writing assignments for this course.

Late Work: In order for the class to work, it's crucial to complete assignments on time. In general, I do not accept late work unless you have made arrangements with me ahead of time.

Submission of Work: It's important to save your work and make back-up copies since computers can be unreliable. I do not accept email submission of your work. However, I encourage you to email me with questions, comments, or concerns. Feel free to call me to discuss your work.

PARTICIPATION: In this course, it is essential that everyone participate regularly. In evaluating your participation, I will look at your willingness to enter into discussions of the readings; your discussion of the work shared by others; your full-fledged participation as a member of the class, including writing workshops; your submission of work on time. I'm assigning 150 points to participation and hope you'll see it as an opportunity to take an active role in the class. If you don't volunteer, I'll call on you, but it's better for everyone if you choose when to participate.

A NOTE ON CLASSROOM DECORUM: Please make sure cell phones are turned off during class. Please do not send or receive text messages during class. Laptops are not allowed. Please do not leave the classroom unless it's an emergency.

ACADEMIC INTEGRITY: The strength of any academic community depends on the ethical conduct of its participants. This means that all work that you submit in this class must be your own. It is understood that your papers will involve you in conversations with others; however, it is crucial that you appropriately cite the contributions that others have made in your work. If you have questions about how to cite sources accurately, please ask. Plagiarism is a serious offense and inevitably involves far-reaching consequences. It will not be tolerated in this course

REVISION

Nancy Sommers suggests that many students look at the process of revision as one that involves merely rewording and approach the problem with a "thesaurus philosophy of writing" (381). For some students, then, rewriting is fundamentally a process of editing and involves making corrections in grammar, punctuation, and usage. Experienced writers, on the other hand, see revision as a process of re-seeing (re-visioning) the shape and structure of a piece of writing and of thinking about how to fulfill readers' expectations. Sommers writes:

The experienced writers see their revision process as a recursive process—a process with significant recurring activities—with different levels of attention and different agenda for each cycle. During the first revision cycle their attention is primarily directed towards narrowing the topic and delimiting their ideas. At this point, they are not as concerned as they are later about vocabulary and style. The [&]quot;I can't write five words but that I change seven." –Dorothy Parker

[&]quot;The best reason for putting anything down on paper is that one may then change it."—B. de Voto experienced writers explained that they get closer to the meaning by not limiting themselves too early to lexical concerns. (386)

Your revision process will include both rewriting and editing. I encourage you to revise each essay before you submit the final version. In addition, you may revise any essay you have turned in on time for a higher grade on or before the due date I assign for the revised essay.
