This is a course in public sector economics at the sub-national level, and is intended primarily for graduate students in economics. Others are welcome but with the consent of the instructor. Using the tools of microeconomics, we will examine the provision and allocation of local public goods and services. I will give two lectures of background at the start, since you haven’t had the opportunity to take the survey public sector economics course. This class will concentrate almost exclusively on empirical tests of the underlying theory. The relevant theoretical articles are included on the reading list for your reference, and may also be incorporated into the presentation of the empirical work. The reading list may not be complete, but it is also long to serve as a reference source. It is assumed that students in this course have a thorough understanding of micro theory, and are acquainted with the tools of statistical analysis. There is no textbook, although Public Sector Economics by Boadway and Wildasin (2nd ed.) and State and Local Public Finance by Fisher are excellent background materials—see me if you can’t find them. The papers I currently intend to cover in class are identified by an *, though I will announce any changes in advance of class (there will be pretty many, most likely!).

Notation in the reading list:

- AER = American Economic Review
- QJE = Quarterly Journal of Economics
- JPE = Journal of Political Economy
- NTJ = National Tax Journal
- PC = Public Choice
- REStat = Review of Economics and Statistics
- REStud = Review of Economic Studies
- RandJ = Rand Journal of Economics (formerly the Bell Journal)
- JEL = Journal of Economic Literature
- JLE = Journal of Law and Economics
- JEP = Journal of Economic Perspectives
- EI = Economic Inquiry (formerly Western Economic Journal)

Requirements for this course include a midterm assignment and a final exam. The midterm assignment can be either an exam, or a written project, we will discuss the details in class. If you do a written project, there will be no incompletes unless a journal publication results. N.B. The final exam (required) is Thursday, May 12, at 2 pm.
