MATTER(S). Since the nascent origins of the universe, matter/energy has comprised the essential building blocks of existences that range from galaxies to atoms. Humanity and its productions are inseparable from this stream, and all will eventually return to their shared origins in cosmic dust. For design disciplines, matter offers a point of shared convergence - from its enablement of creative and productive forces to its inherent transcalar ecologies, social impacts, and environmental values. The way designers produce buildings, products, and designs can work in harmony with the material world or can harm it for future generations in a reality of increasing scarcities. This program series posits what truly matters across design disciplines and scales via the social, cultural, historical, and environmental realms - and how designers can create work that is in concert with the consonance of the shared universe. Matter is creative. We want to bring to the front that Matter matters in all design disciplines and holistically expand towards multiple representations of the social, the cultural, and the historical. With the lecture series and events of MATTER(S), we want to acknowledge and focus what matters of matter.
