2014 SCHOLARSHIP BANQUET HIGHLIGHTS

Last year we celebrated the 45th anniversary of the African American Studies Program at the University of Houston, expression can be explained in three: historical; 2. Narrative; and 3. Uplift and advancement for the future. Within the framework of a tier 1 university, the AAS unit at the University of Houston, is one of the oldest AAS programs in the state of Texas. Indeed, the city of Houston has a vibrant and ongoing history of African American life and culture.

This year we pause to remember Selma, 50 years ago marked a critical point during the civil rights movement. Though we have made significant gains, today the community remains in unrest due to police brutality in the inner cities across America. We are honored to have Houston community catalyst, Mr. Harry E. Johnson, Sr. to deliver the charge for the next generation.

AAS continues to be a vital and critical element in preservation of our history now more than ever. Over the past decade AAS at the University of Houston has and will continue to facilitate relevant research, host symposiums and produce scholarly work. In addition, we will perpetuate cultivation and increased awareness, while stimulating sensitivity to issues of culture, race, ethnicity, class, and gender.

Lastly, with reference to uplift and advancement, AAS has postured to advance the thought of an academic major and to participate in the university's strategic plan to assertively diversify and recruit faculty. This will contribute to the enhancement of providing a holistic education for UH students.

Lynn Cecilia Eusan

(b. October 11, 1948 Galveston, TX-
d. September 10, 1971 Houston, TX)

A native of San Antonio, Texas, Lynn C. Eusan was a community activist, student, and the first African American homecoming queen at the University of Houston and cited by others as the first black homecoming queen at predominantly white institution in the south. Additionally, she is a founder of the African American Studies Program at the University of Houston and SHAPE Community Center. Eusan political activism centered on international issues concerning African people, disparity, and racial segregation.

Emmett J. Scott

(b. February 13, 1873, Houston, TX-
d. December 12, 1957, Washington, DC)

A native of Houston, Texas, Emmett J. Scott garnered a reputation as Booker T. Washington's chief aide. He was also the highest ranking African American in the Woodrow Wilson's Administration. The son of ex-slaves, Scott was born in 1873. In 1887, he entered Wiley College in Marshall, Texas, eventually leaving school in his third year. Soon he worked at the Houston Post, first as a sexton, and later as a copyboy and journalist. In 1893 Scott, along with Charles N. Love and Jack Tibbit, formed the Texas Freeman, Houston's first African American newspaper. Scott also worked for Galveston, Texas, politician and labor leader, Norris W. Cuney.

Scott caught the attention of Booker T. Washington, who hired him in 1897. For the next eighteen years, Scott served Washington as a confidant, personal secretary, speech writer, and ghostwriter; in 1912, he became Tuskegee's treasurer-secretary. Scott advocated Washington's philosophy of constructive accommodation over immediate social integration. Scott and New York Age editor T. Thomas Fortune helped Washington found the National Negro Business League (NNBL) in 1900. In 1917, two years after Washington's death, President Woodrow Wilson appointed Scott special advisor of black affairs to Secretary of War Newton Baker.

Dr. Marguerite Ross Barnett

(b. May 22, 1942, Charlottesville, VA- d. February 26, 1992, Wailuku, Hawaii)

Born May 22, 1942, in Charlottesville, Virginia, Barnett is the daughter of Dewey Ross and Mary (Douglass) Barnett. She completed elementary school and in 1959 graduated from Bennett High School, both in Buffalo, New York. In 1964, she graduated from Antioch College with an A.B. degree in political science. She continued her studies in political science at the University of Chicago where, in 1966, she received an M.A. degree and, in 1972, a Ph.D. As a child Barnett planned to become a scientist. While studying a course on Indian politics, she changed her career interests. As a part of her doctoral studies, she conducted research in south India for two years. For her subsequent book on ethnic and cultural pluralism, The Politics of Cultural Nationalism in South India (Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1976), the American Political Science Association awarded her its top book prize in 1981. Barnett became the first black and the first woman to head the University of Houston. Her appointment resulted in widespread press coverage. An article in the March 6, 1991, issue of the Chronicle of Higher Education put her in the national spotlight as head of an institution that she says is "literally on the cusp of greatness" (Mangan, A-3). Barnett is one of three women to lead universities with more than thirty thousand students. The fact that she is the only black leading a major research institution is less significant to her than her agenda at the University of Houston and her belief in the role that public urban universities should play in addressing a wide range of issues, from homelessness to space exploration. Barnett believes that urban research universities should help society "solve its key conundrums," They must do so "in the same way land-grant institutions helped solve the problems of the 19th century" (Mangan, A-3).

HARRY E. JOHNSON, SR.
KEYNOTE SPEAKER

Harry E. Johnson Sr., an attorney in Houston, is the president of the Washington, D.C. Martin Luther King, Jr. National Memorial Project, Inc., which is constructing the first memorial on the National Mall to honor an African American.

Johnson earned the bachelor's degree in political science at Xavier University of New Orleans. He has completed graduate studies in public administration at Washington University in St. Louis and earned the doctor of jurisprudence from Thurgood Marshall School of Law in Houston.

From 2001 to 2004, Johnson served as the national (general) president of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Inc., an organization of more than 175,000 college-educated men. He spearheaded such innovative programs as the value-added services program, which allowed fraternity members to receive discounts on goods and services from participating vendors while at the same time created a new revenue stream for the fraternity.

Johnson also created an Economic Development Foundation for the fraternity. Through this program, the fraternity made an unprecedented, $30-million deal with Church's Chicken (AFC) that allows its members to develop up to 50 Church's Chicken restaurants in urban areas across the country. The focus on economic empowerment and job creation continued as Johnson worked to bring on another partner, Dominoes Pizza.

Other accomplishments include: the creation of a Political Action Committee—chaired by the Honorable Marc Morial, the former mayor of New Orleans; the extension of the role and membership of Alpha Phi Alpha's Think Tank (World Policy Council)—including adding new members Cornell West and Congressman Ronald Dellums (Ret. Calif.); and the addition of a lecture series on tolerance and a focus on the issue of HIV infections and AIDS to The World Policy Council's role.

Under Johnson's leadership, Alpha Phi Alpha provided the Big Brothers Big Sisters of America organization with more African American role models than ever before in its 100-year history. Johnson's vision of growth led Big Brothers Big Sisters to elect him to its national board. He also is a member of the national board of One Hundred Black Men.

Among Johnson's professional affiliations are the National Bar Association, American Bar Association, NAACP and Boy Scouts of American. Texas Governor Rick Perry also appointed Johnson to the Texas Southern University Board of Regents.

Johnson has been married for 24 years to his wife, Karen. They reside in Houston and have three children: Jennifer, Harry Jr. and Nicholas.
