African American Studies

The mission of African American Studies is to provide students with a comprehensive quality undergraduate and graduate education and the opportunity for a creative intellectual experience based on the critical and systematic study of the life, thought, and practice of African peoples in their current and historical unfolding.

Interdisciplinary in both conception and practice, African American Studies seeks to critically examine and understand the African experience from an African-centered perspective, that is, from a position internal to the culture, joined with an openness and receptivity to the rich variety and instructiveness of the total human experience. African American Studies stresses comparative analysis and holistic thinking as indispensable to the discipline and the general educational enterprise.

Framework, the goals of African American Studies are:

- To expand our degree offerings by transitioning from a program to a tenure-granting department, and, thus, recruit a faculty that will enable the department to introduce a baccalaureate major degree in the discipline at the University of Houston;
- To cultivate and increase the awareness of UH students to international and cultural pluralism and to stimulate their sensitivity to issues of culture, race, ethnicity, class, and gender;
- To further internationalize the Africana Studies curriculum to include the study of African peoples in other parts of the world in addition to those on the Continent and in the United States, i.e., in the Caribbean, Central and South America, Asia, Europe, and the Pacific Rim;
- To encourage expanded scholarly productivity and professional activity by the department's faculty to maintain currency with the latest developments in the discipline and insure the highest levels of instruction and intellectual exchange;
- To increase the holding of conferences, seminars, colloquia, and other activities devoted to the expansion of the discipline;
- To develop and maintain links with local high schools and community colleges;
- To maintain and strengthen existing links with the community through expanding joint educational and practical projects and exchanges;
- To increase the utility of academic service to Houston's African American community through research and publication on historical and public policy issues by means of The Black Houston History Project and the Institute for African American Policy Research; and
- To expand and further consolidate the intellectual space of the discipline as an integral and indispensable part of the university's mission to offer a culturally pluralistic quality undergraduate and graduate education to its students.

Center for Study of African American Culture

The Center for the Study of African American Culture (CSAAC) is committed to interdisciplinary research revived in the multiple dimensions of African American life and culture. CSAAC contributes to the growth of research and publications by the University of Houston, bringing together scholars from across the country in moderated and academic forums. As part of its ongoing commitment to the presentation and publication of thematic ideas which contribute to the growth and expansion of knowledge and research in Africana life and culture, CSAAC has developed three research divisions in support of these initiatives.

DIVISIONS

The Black Houston History Project

An initiative committed to the research, study and preservation of the history of African American people and institutions in the city of Houston, Texas, from the nineteenth through the twentieth century.

Institute for African American Policy Research

Revived in the 2002-2003 academic year, the Institute for African American Policy Research is committed to the exploration, study and publication of research related to public policy issues affecting Africana people in the city of Houston.

Annual Africana Studies Research Symposium

Hosted annually by the Institute for African American Policy Research, the symposium explores critical issues in Africana Studies research through presentations by scholars from across the United States and with designed academic publication outcome.

Black Images in the Media Symposium & Arts Festival

Message From The Founder

When I first envisioned a major arts festival for Houston in 2008 I envisioned a plan that would make it one of the largest in the country within three to five years. As we are about to embark upon the 3rd Black Images in the Media Arts Festival and Symposium I am proud to say we are right on target. This year's festival, scheduled for April 10-14, 2013 promises to be the best yet with major nationally recognized and accomplished performing artist in attendance. Expect more entertainment, more informative workshop sessions and more of some of the best films ever produced. This year, we will even have a special stage and activities for kids. Although we will have a modest registration fee this year compared to a free event as in the past, we think you'll agree that with all the activities planned, this year's festival is worth the price of admission. As founding director, I welcome each and everyone of you with a hearty Texas style "howdy" as you are about to embark upon a journey of a lifetime ...the 3rd annual Black Images in the Media Arts Festival and Symposium 2013.

-F. Anderson

Film Festival Overview

The Black Images in the Media Symposium & Arts Festival will be held in Houston, Texas April 10-14, 2013 on the campus of the University of Houston. The event is sponsored by the University of Houston African American Studies Program, creating an opportunity for scholars and artists in the entertainment industry from across the country to explore Black Images In the Media. The goal of the Symposium is to provide scholarly discussion, explore current media trends, and viable solutions. We salute the contributions of African Americans to the Arts, providing educational enrichment through local artist displays, performances, and screening independent films.

Mission

The mission of the Black Images in the Media Symposium & Arts Festival is to provide a platform for African American independent film makers, actors, producers and entertainers to showcase their works in ways that depict positive black images as well as a vehicle for industry professionals and students entering the industry to network.
