October 9, 2016, marks the ten year anniversary of North Korea's first nuclear test. Despite dynamic changes in East Asia over the last ten years, a nuclear armed North Korea has been a constant factor complicating the regional order. In 1994, a nuclear North Korea seemed to be an unlikely prospect. So, what went wrong; how has a nuclear North Korea altered the regional order; and what strategies should the U.S. and its allies adopt to address the world's newest nuclear power? Join Asia Society for a special discussion with Dr. Han Sung-Joo, former Ambassador from The Republic of Korea to the U.S., and gain an insider's perspective as he explores these critical questions.
