“Egypt’s Turbulent Politics: From ‘Revolution’ to ‘Coup’ to Democracy?”

Thursday, February 26th at 2:30pm
Location: Honors Commons, M.D. Anderson Library

Samer S. Shehata is Associate Professor of Middle Eastern Politics in the Department of International and Area Studies at the University of Oklahoma. A specialist in Egyptian politics and the Muslim Brotherhood, he has previously taught at Georgetown University, New York University, Columbia University, and the American University in Cairo. He received his PhD from the Politics Department at Princeton University in 2000. His current book project, The Muslim Brotherhood: From Opposition Movement to Political Power, is under contract with Stanford University Press. The book will examine the Muslim Brotherhood’s involvement in formal politics and analyze the group’s political strategies, particularly its electoral participation and parliamentary activities during the last decade of Mubarak’s rule through the present. Extensive field research with Brotherhood candidates during election campaigns in Mansoura (2005), Alexandria (2010, 2011), and Cairo (2011) will provide the basis for this book.
