

Hani Jneid, MD, FACC, FAHA, FSCAI

Professor, UTMB Health

Division Chief

Medical Director, Cardiovascular Service Line

Division: Cardiovascular Medicine

Department: Internal Medicine

Dr. Hani Jneid is a UTMB Cardiologist who specializes in Clinical & Interventional Cardiology. He is the Chief of the Division of Cardiology at UTMB, where he also serves as the Medical Director of the Cardiovascular Care Line, & the John Sealy Distinguished Centennial Chair in Cardiology.

He finished his Internal Medicine training at the Cleveland Clinic, his Clinical Cardiology training at the University of Louisville, & his Interventional / Structural Cardiology training at Massachusetts General Hospital of Harvard Medical School, & obtained triple board-certification in Internal Medicine, Cardiovascular Disease, & Interventional Cardiology.

His clinical interests include the areas of coronary artery disease, aortic valve disease, & cardiovascular prevention. He helped initiate the first TAVI (Transcatheter Aortic Valve Implantation) program in the VA healthcare system in the US & spearheaded the cardiovascular team that initiated the first TAVI program for Harris Healthcare System IN Houston. Notably, he is the recipient of several regional & national awards including a Medal of Service for Clinical Care of Veteran Patients at the DeBakey VA Medical Center in 2016, the 2021 Star Award for Excellence in Patient Care at Baylor College of Medicine (2021), & the 2021 national Gifted Educator Award by the American College of Cardiology.

Dr. Jneid has versatile research interests with focus on outcomes research & clinical trials in the areas of acute coronary syndrome, coronary artery disease, & TAVI. He has over 340 PubMed publications, serves on 7 journal editorial boards, and has chaired & participated in several national American College of Cardiology & American Heart Association guidelines, performance measures documents, & position statements.