Competency areas addressed by the course (refer to appended chart for competencies that are required and optional in each component area):

Critical Thinking

Teamwork

Communication Skills

Social Responsibility

X Empirical & Quantitative Skills

Personal Responsibility

Because we will be assessing student learning outcomes across multiple core courses, assessments assigned in your course must include assessments of the core competencies. For each competency checked above, indicated the specific course assignment(s) which, when completed by students, will provide evidence of the competency. Provide detailed information, such as copies of the paper or project assignment, copies of individual test items, etc. A single assignment may be used to provide data for multiple competencies.

Critical Thinking:

The main thrust for critical thinking is grounded in the appreciation of the cultural constructions that establish those discourses, laws, and habits that are articulated and diffused from the mantle of authoritative voices. Students appreciate how cultural constructions are neither fundamental truths nor existential necessities; even though they are a powerful compass in our lives and our roles as members of families, nations and racial groups and so forth. In 12 hundred words students will provide a paper on the following: Terms words used in in our everyday life which we have come to accept without question will acquire wholly different dimensions when exposed to anthropological thinking. Provide a discussion of the dimension of the following words in the way that they are commonly used and the insights provided by anthropology. Choose five among the following terms: family, race, ethnicity, normal behaviors, evolution, primitive, American exceptionalism and natural behaviors. Discuss the way you had understood these terms prior to coming to class and the way that you now perceive them.

Communication Skills:

This being a large lecture class, the opportunities for communication are focused on essay questions in exams. Students are directed to prepare five essays for the mid-term and five for the final, ten in all; from which students are expected to answer two at each exam session, four in sum. In these essays, students are instructed to formulate the following

- A clear statement of thesis or opinion
- The methods by which information will be been selected to support the thesis statement or opinion
- Concise exposition of material that supports the thesis or opinion
- Evaluation of the degree to which the supportive material has served its purpose
- Summary of what has been achieved in presenting the material.

Empirical & Quantitative Skills:

Students will be asked to provide an example of fieldwork, whereby they use observational and interview skills that are adopted in cultural anthropology. Fieldwork may talk place an ethnic neighborhood, a place of worship, a school, a place where food and beverages are consumed, or in a learning environment.

Through lectures and readings, students will have learned that cultural anthropology collects data through observation and interview and then makes inferences coming from a phenomenological perspective. The other perspective in anthropology, a largely positivistic perspective (measurable and "scientific" exists, for sure, in physical anthropology and archeology), however, that is not the emphasis here because measurement-oriented and scientific approaches are already covered in so many sciences and increasingly in the social science courses. Therefore this exercise focuses on the distinctive phenomenological perspective of anthropology.

Teamwork:

Social Responsibility:

Throughout the course the students are engaged in conversations central to our ideas of social justice. On the one hand, anthropology teaches us cultural relativism; not to judge others by standards peculiar to our own cultural background. On the other hand, as we now appreciate, more than ever, that cultural relativism may have its limits when we address topics such as genital mutilation, holy wars, and free speech. As we grapple with these topics, students will have gained a sense of responsibility about an appropriate response for them as citizens who participate in an increasingly diverse global community. Study will be expected to subject a paragraph through blackboard every three weeks (four in all) weeks reflecting how the information in this course may enhance their responsibility as a national citizen, family member, worker, neighbor, and world citizen.

Will the syllabus vary across multiple section of the course? Yes No

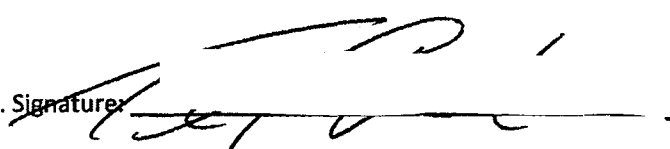

If yes, list the assignments that will be constant across sections:

Inclusion in the core is contingent upon the course being offered and taught at least once every other academic year. Courses will be reviewed for renewal every 5 years.

The department understands that instructors will be expected to provide student work and to participate in university-wide assessments of student work. This could include, but may not be limited to, designing instruments such as rubrics, and scoring work by students in this or other courses. In addition, instructors of core courses may be asked to include brief assessment activities in their course.
