

Excerpts of unsolicited comments received from faculty members
October 1998

"...first, consider The Technology Source as one publication outlet for your work."

- Professor and Editor of Technology Source, University of North Carolina - Chapel Hill

"Additionally, I was wondering I could use your survey (not linked to your database), as an example of an on-line survey, for my research methods class."

- Professor, Columbia University, Teachers College.

"I generally do not answer the multitude of questionnaires that are sent to me, but yours was so well designed and thought out that I found it a pleasure to do. In fact, I sent it on to a student of mine who is doing similar work, because I thought it was so well done."

- Professor, Arizona State University

"I'd like to be able to show your survey to my doctoral class, but I could also do this by printing off a copy if you are concerned they might reply and taint the sample. Or perhaps, after the study's done we might be able to take a look."

- Professor, Pepperdine University

"I must say, your questions have also helped me to focus on areas that I had not considered, and as I begin the design of a new merged on-line course (technology and mainstreaming), I wanted you to know that it will be better because of you! Thank you for inviting me to participate!"

-California State University San Marcos

"I enjoyed filling out your survey -- there were a few questions towards the end of the survey that gave me ideas of approaches/techniques to try that may address some of the concerns I have about web based teaching. So, thank you!"

- Minot State University

"May I show your questionnaire to our Distance Learning task force?"

- Professor, Valdosta State University

Some institutions from which I received multiple responses

Pepperdine University
Indiana University
University of Iowa
Univ. of South Florida

Arizona State University Curry School - Virginia
University of Illinois - UC Vanderbilt University
Lesley College
SUNY
San Diego State Univ.